The presentation board is a large-scale architectural drawing. At the center is a detailed site plan of a building complex, with several key areas highlighted in yellow. To the left of the site plan are three small circular icons, each containing a different material sample. Below these icons is a small photograph of a building's exterior. To the right of the site plan are two large architectural sections, one above the other, showing the internal structure and floor levels. Further to the right are two smaller photographs: the top one shows a building's facade, and the bottom one shows an interior space. Below the main site plan and sections are three smaller architectural drawings, likely elevations or smaller sections, each with a corresponding material sample below it. The entire board is mounted on a dark red wall.

An architectural model of a building's back elevation. The model is made of dark grey and black materials. It features a central section with a series of white, chevron-shaped slats. On either side of this central section are two large, dark, curved structures that resemble wings or canopies, supported by a network of thin, white, diagonal struts. The background is a plain, light-colored wall.
